

Learn to read sheet music.

Now you or your child can take piano lessons that you have always dreamed of...

- Do you have a desire to play the piano, but never had the opportunity to take lessons?
- Can you play the piano by ear, but cannot read music?
- Do you have a child who would like to learn how to play the piano?
- Would you like to play piano with both hands in seven easy lessons?

Who I Am

About Me

Gail Cavanaugh is a piano teacher and art instructor for beginners and intermediate students, ages six and up. She has taught in the schools and community centers in Newport, RI. She studied piano for one year at the Hartt School of Music, West Hartford, Connecticut. She published a book, Beyond My Imagination, a novel based on her teaching experiences. The book is available online at Amazon.com, and Barnes and Nobles.

Discover the benefits of music instruction.

- Music has a calming effect.
- Children score better on standardized tests
- Music students have better reading skills.
- Music helps a child develop better math skills.
- Children who study music learn not to accept mediocrity.

Method of Practice

Students learn easy, well-known songs which help them to learn rhythm and play quickly.

Regular practice is encouraged for best results.

Piano or keyboard at home is essential for learning how to play the piano.

Recitals held after seven or more lessons. Children are not encouraged to participate in a recital unless playing proficiently.

It builds confidence and gives the child self-esteem.
